 - a. unlawfully coercing employees to vote for Local 339 in the recent election through its communications at its mandatory election-related meeting held prior to the election, including, among other things, by instructing them on how to vote, taking firm positions on issues that would arise in negotiations with Local 108, and maliciously lying about Local 108 and its related frange benefit funds, as well as about the retirement benefits the Employer claimed be providing.
 - b. preferentially permitting Local 339 campaigning on its property throughout the critical period, and most dramatically on the evening before the vote when Local 339 was allowed to establish a gauntlet of representative along-side numerous supportive employer representatives. Employees had to pass through this gauntlet to go to work, and had no choice but to speak to the 339 representatives while the Employer surveilled the activity. In contrast, Local 108 representatives were instructed to leave when they once so much as stood on the Employer's property.
 - c. surveilling employees' contact with Local 108, including by re-directing its security cameras during the critical period so as to pick-up Local 108 representatives' presence on public property adjacent to the Employer's facility, and further, in contrast to its treatment of employees speaking to Local 339, directed employees caught conversing with Local 108 to discontinue such conversations.
 - d. questioning employees as to how they intended to vote in the election and instructed them that they were expected to vote for Local 339 and/or against Local 108.
